To whom it may concern:

I have had the pleasure of working Four Seasons Environmental, Inc's Commissioning Team on several large, new construction projects. In each case, they have provided exceptional commissioning services to the owner.

Four Seasons knowledge and experience with building systems and controls provides great value to the owner throughout the design and construction process. Their team has been extremely thorough throughout both the design review and functional/operational testing phases when compared to other commissioning agent firms I have worked with on my projects.

Their reports are very detailed and almost always include a picture. This helps to clearly communicate the items and issues which is very valuable to not only the design engineer's time, but to the owner's, construction manager's, and contractor's time as well.

Finally, in my most recent experience with Four Seasons, where I think they separate themselves most is their willingness to not only identify issues, but to come to the table and participate in developing and executing solutions to these issues.

Four Seasons has proven to be a qualified firm and I would recommend them for commissioning services on your project.

Respectfully,
